

iGlobility VidCast Week Of 20060827 Transcript

Greetings, and welcome to the iGlobility.com VidCast for the week of 24 September, 2006. I'm your host, Lewis C Grey, and for the next few minutes, I'll regale you with tales of technology, personal insights, rumours of upcoming events, gadgets, and whatever else I feel like talking about! This is the last VidCast of the month, so I will be doing a short review of a product mentioned here previously. The HT41 Wizard Case from VajaCases.com. I truly appreciate your stopping by, and I hope you will continue to visit iglobility.com for all things related to Global Digital Mobility.

Now on to the show!

No software installs this week. I am currently testing previous installs of xBar from xetranet.free.fr, Qusnetsoft Newsreader from qusnetsoft.ru, iLauncher 3 from SBSH.net, Remote Controll II from wincrosoft.de and NoviiRemote Deluxe from novii.tv. There is a new review on the main iGlobility.com site for the FlexWallet 2006 product from WebIS.net. Browse on over and check it out!

I have only had soft resets this week. More than usual due to all the software testing I am doing right now

In mobility news, T-Mobile is getting ready to launch a dual mode phone which offers both cell service and a Skype like internet calling service. They have concluded testing in Seattle, and plan to launch in a major west coast market in the 4th quarter of this year. Also, Mobile Top Level Domains is now offering the dot mobi domain name extension. For more information, point your browser to www.mtld.mobi. dot mobi is intended for mobile device website development, but interest is not as strong as originally thought as most companies already have technology in place to detect a mobile browser and simply point the device to the correct site.

From the Freaks on the Streets File, Mercora.com has begun offering media streaming to any windows mobile 5 enabled device. It can stream over any connectivity, down to EDGE speeds. The service called M is free until October 31, then subscription fees will start. It allows you to stream music from your desktop coputer, and eventually music from five other machines, like your friends music collections as well. For more information, head over to mercora.com...

Last week, I put a review up on the site for the HT41 Wizard case from VajaCases.com. If you are in the market for a case for your little friend, and want one that has all the refinement of a nice Prada Handbag, but without the thousand dollar pricetags, I strongly suggest you check out the cases from Vajacases.com. When I received the case, it came in this very nice presentation box which has a book like design. I withdrew the inner box from the outer box, and inside there is a folding lid where the case is housed. When I first opened the inner box, the smell of fine leather found its way to my nose, and I had to stop for a moment and take it all in... OK, the moment passed, and I had to get this bad boy into my hands. The first thing I noticed was how light in weight, yet how sturdy the case felt in my hands. I opened the flap and found three slots for Mini SD card storage. As you can see, I only use one slot for this purpose. The other two hold guitar picks! I like the placement of these slots because they do not come into contact with the device. Other case I have used have the slots in close proximity to the screen, and that has always concerned me. You can get this case with or without a beltloop. This case has the beltloop. This is a permanent beltloop, so if you have a wide belt, you may have fitting problems. So far, it has worked with all my belts but one, so no big deal there. Once your device is in the case, you will probably notice how little bulk it actually adds. The ends of the case extend a bit beyond the end of the device so there is protection there should you bump into a door or something. The magnetic clasps took a bit to get used to but they work very well, and feel very secure. I ride a motorcycle most everyday, and this is the only case I feel secure wearing while riding. This is due to the permanent beltloop. To recap, if you are looking for a new suit for your friend, I highly suggest the cases over at VajaCases.com

Don't forget to stop by iGlobility.com and submit a review of a product you have used. As always, If you have any questions, comments, criticisms, or just need someone to talk to, please drop me a line at vidcast@iglobility.com. Maybe I will read it in an upcoming vidcast! Until next time, this is Lewis C Grey, signing off. Have a great week, and stay mobile.
